NEW BUSINESS
Finance: Property Tax Burden Issues (Residential Assessments v. Commercial)

Councilmember Keolker-Wheeler commented on the shift in property tax burden from the commercial to the residential sector, noting that she recently received the second property tax increase on her home within one year’s time. She requested that Council receive a presentation from the Finance Department on this subject.

Mayor Tanner agreed that Renton’s overall assessed value has remained constant for some time, despite a hundred or more million dollars’ worth of development that has occurred in the past several years. Residential property assessments are increasing by an average of three percent. He suggested that Renton join with other South King County cities to formally protest the assessment methodology which benefits commercial properties to the detriment of residential properties.

Mrs. Keolker-Wheeler noted that in evaluating individual parcels affected by the moratorium on multi-family development in commercial areas, staff discovered that several of these properties were absent from the tax rolls, and had been for quite some time.
